Installation begins on Wallenda tightrope

Chicago Tribune

When Nik Wallenda makes his way across the Chicago River on Sunday, he'll be 600 feet in the air on a tightrope made of sturdy, 100 percent steel.

The tedious job of connecting the 750-foot wire from the west tower of Marina City to the Leo Burnett Building across the river was to begin Thursday evening, with about 40 workers running a large spool of wire—three-quarters-of-an-inch thick, or about the size of a nickel—along the bridge at Dearborn Street down Wacker Drive and later hoisting the steel wire up the side of the buildings.

They expect to work through most of the night, according to Terry Troffer, Wallenda's father and the chief rigger, making sure the wire does not touch or damage the buildings.

On Friday, workers will install about 100 feet of wire for the second trek, from the east to west towers of Marina City.

If all goes as planned, Wallenda will walk more than two city blocks—uphill at a 15-degree angle—between the west tower and the Leo Burnett Building, take the elevator down, cross the river and head to the top of the east Marina City tower to begin his second walk, for which he plans to be blindfolded. He has said he will not use a harness or a net for the walks.

Viewer's guide to Wallenda's walk

Here is a guide to street closures and where to watch Nik Wallenda's tight rope walk downtown. Organizers are expected to cancel the event if winds exceed 50 mph. Current forecasts call for a high of 47 degrees Sunday and wind speeds around 10-12 mph, the National Weather Service in suburban Romeoville reported Thursday.

Street closings

Closed Sunday from 5 p.m. to midnight (subject to change)

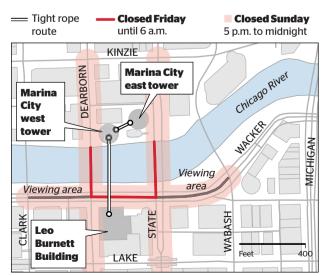

- » Upper Wacker from Clark to Wabash
- » State from Lake to Kinzie
- » Dearborn from Lake to Kinzie
- » Also: The Chicago River will be closed to watercraft from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.

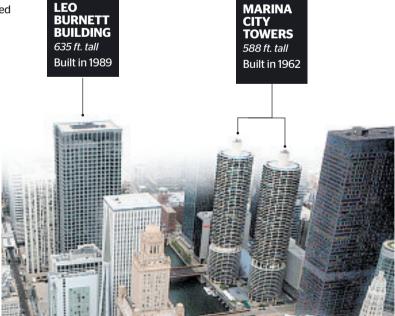

Where to watch

- » Wacker from Clark to Dearborn
- » Wacker from Wabash to State
- » The event will be broadcast live by the Discovery Channel. Viewers also can watch at skyscraperlive.com.

Learn the right way to fight sexual violence

Breaking news: DePaul students are just now getting involved in anti-sexualviolence work at their university.

At least that's what a group of students with a, um, catchy T-shirt idea that seeks to raise awareness about sexual violence on campus would like you to think.

"Consent the D" is the brainchild of DePaul student Randy Vollrath, and run by a group of students. It's a play on a failed T-shirt campaign from 2013, "Fear the D," which was meant to support the basketball team (D = DePaul) but instead came off as an awkward innuendo telling people to fear penises.

So, I am sure that, like me, many of you are wondering: How does a T-shirt about fearing penises somehow become a campaign about stopping on-campus sexual violence?

One D-word: dudes. First-off, I am all for men being involved in anti-violence work, especially when it comes to rape. Men overwhelmingly are the perpetrators in most sexual assault incidents, especially on campuses, where one in five women face sexual violence. So having men involved is major—we can't stop rape culture without everyone's help, which is exactly what Emma Watson echoed in her September He for She campaign speech for the United Nations.

However, due to men's roles in rape culture, they need to be so damn careful about how they go about this work. And to start a campaign aimed at helping stop violence at De-Paul, specifically violence toward women, and immediately refer to "the D" is not careful. At best it's lazy, but at worst it's insensitive.

Who is the shirts' audience? Who are they telling to "Consent the D"? Beyond language that comes off as annoyingly aggressive, like someone yelling a command, the shirt still is not empowering women or anyone else who enjoys "the D." It's forcing them to consent and taking away responsibility from "the D" that should be asking for consent.

As a student at DePaul, I was deeply involved in anti-sexual-violence work. I helped start the first student group that tried to raise awareness through the school's Sexual Health and Violence Prevention office. I helped organize a Take Back the Night event, a 10-plus-year annual walk to raise awareness around sexual violence. It was during that event one year that I saw a friend almost get arrested during a protest while being told, "If you don't want to be raped then don't dress

But what I did most of all was step back and let women take the lead while always supporting them. As a man, that was probably the most important thing I could do. I did this not because men don't face sexual violence—according to the Rape Crisis Center, men make up 10 percent of all cases-but because when women talk about sexual violence, people seem to not listen.

"Consent the D" is problematic for many reasons: the verb-noun confusion. The aggressive tone. The focus on the D. The fact that a shirt meant to raise awareness around sexual violence doesn't even spell out

But for me personally, the biggest issue here is that a group of dudes have come forward with an idea they think will stop sexual violence (which it won't), and are acting like there hasn't been years of work being done at DePaul. All because they are dudes, and people listen to dudes much quicker than they do women. Even when it concerns issues that affect women at much higher rates. Like this issue of sexual violence. Like reproductive rights. Like ... shall I go on?

3 REFERENDUMS ON YOUR BALLOT

Chicago voters are being asked to answer 10 ballot questions on a number of topics, ranging from whether to raise the minimum wage and ban assault weapons sales to whether the state should increase funding for mental-health services and the FAA should revisit the airport noise standard.

AMONG THE REFERENDUMS

Should the minimum wage be increased from $8.25 to $10 per hour in Illinois? Because 71 percent of workers paid at or below the minimum wage are under the age of 35, the issue is likely to be one of the biggest topics for young voters. The referendum is only advisory and non-binding, meaning it will gauge support or opposition but has no legal power.

Should all health-insurance policies be required to cover birth control and contraception? While birth control insurance coverage is state law, the U.S. Supreme Court over the summer ruled on a case that some private companies don't have to provide contraceptives coverage based on the employer's religious beliefs. The referendum is only advisory and non-binding, meaning it will gauge support or opposition but has no legal power.

Should the state revise the rules on locating medical marijuana dispensaries? The state approved the four-year pilot program to allow the legal use of medical marijuana and accepted applications last month to award 60 dispensary licenses. State law prohibits dispensaries from operating within saries from operating within 1,000 feet of a school or day care center. The referendum is only advisory and non-binding, meaning it will gauge support or opposition but has no legal power.

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

Quinn and businessman Bruce Rauner—vying in a competitive, mudslinging race for governor, Millennial voters will decide by Election Day which Baby Boomer candidate can better bridge the generational gap, address their issues and get their support.

During the campaign season, Quinn and Rauner have tried to win over Millennials by airing Internet ads, visiting college campuses and attending the NextGen Illinois Convention at the UIC Forum last month, impressing upon young voters how next Tuesday's election will affect them. With a Tribune poll this month putting the two candidates in a dead heat, young voters can carry a lot of political power if they cast ballots.

"In a close race, like the governor race, they could definitely decide the outcome," said Peter Levine, director of the Center for Information and Research on Civic Learning and Engagement (CIRCLE) at Tufts University. "They have lately, not always, lately have been a pretty strong Democratic voting bloc."

Young voters have proven their impact by pushing Democratic candidates over the top. Consider the 2008 presidential race in which Barack Obama won Indiana, North Carolina and Virginia thanks to voters younger than 30. Had young voters in 2012 stayed home or thrown their support behind Mitt Romney, Obama would have lost Ohio, Florida, Virginia and Pennsylvania, and collectively 80 electoral votes enough to make Romney president, according to CIRCLE.

The main question now is, are the candidates for Illinois governor doing enough to court young voters, particularly for a midterm election where voter turnout is generally lower than a presidential year?

Rauner's campaign pointed to setting up nearly 20 chapters of Students for Rauner on high school and college campuses. They counted more than 1,000 active student members who combined have volunteered more than 20,000 hours since the beginning of the school year.

"Bruce is running for governor to provide a brighter future for the next generation of Illinoisans," campaign spokesman Mike Schrimpf said in an email.

Meanwhile, Quinn touted his fight to increase access to higher education and support for marriage equality—issues important to young voters. His campaign said it has engaged young voters by delivering Quinn's message on mobile devices and in digital ads on social media, the Internet, and Hulu, Xbox and Pandora.

"This is a critical election for the young people in our state, and we're working night and day to ensure they know what's at stake and how Governor Quinn is fighting for them," Quinn's spokeswoman Izabela Miltko said in an email.

On Twitter, Rauner posted photos with college students and young professionals at events. Quinn's YouTube channel has a video ad calling Rauner the "Wolf of Winnetka" inspired by the "Wolf of Wall Street" movie trailer featuring Kanye West's "Black Skinhead" song. But the candidates' efforts to reach, connect with and persuade young voters may not be enough.

"I'm definitely not seeing much [of the candidates] on social media, which is where we're at all the time," said Jarrod Simpson, 35, an undecided voter in Logan Square.

Megan Leahy plans to cast her vote for Quinn. "I obviously don't think he's perfect by any means. But in comparison to Rauner, I would say I agree with more of his policies," said Leahy, 27, who also lives in Logan Square. "With Rauner, I don't feel any sort of connection to him with our generation."

mediately, he said.

Having a conversation with young voters in person or over the phone is effective, Levine said. "It is an opportunity for young people to get their questions answered," he said. "It's motivating to have individual contact because it shows somebody cares."

Among the hot button issues for young adults are student loans, the job climate and of course minimum wage.

"They're really worried that when they get out of college, they will not have a job, and if they do have a job, it will be low paying that it won't pay off their loans," Simpson said.

With 71 percent of workers paid at or below the minimum wage under the age of 35, the issue of minimum wage is one of the biggest topics for young voters. A non-binding, advisory referendum on the ballot asks whether the minimum wage should be increased to $10 an hour.

"It's absolutely a sign our issues are paramount to this election and being talked about," said Rebecca Reynolds, executive director of Chicago Votes, a nonpartisan organization to engage young Chicagoans in the political process.

However, more work can done by the candidates on addressing access to affordable education and reforming the justice system, she said.

WILL VOTING CHANGES TRANSLATE TO MORE VOTERS?

Recent changes to allow online voter registration, extend the early voting period to two weeks and offer Election Day voter registration at five Chicago sites were aimed at encouraging greater voter participation.

Illinois election officials could not provide an age breakdown to show just how many Millennials make up the 7.45 million registered voters in the state. But data provided by the Chicago Board of Election Commissioners showed adults ages 18 to 34 account for 31 percent, or 420,740, of the 1.36 million registered voters in Chicago. Voters under 35 accounted for nearly 8 percent of the more than 53,000 early voting ballots cast in Chicago as of earlier this week.

How many young voters will cast ballots in this election remains to be seen.

Voter turnout typically is lower during midterm elections compared with presidential elections due to a mix of factors, including less media attention and less voter outreach, said Peter Levine, director of the Center for Information and Research on Civic Learning and Engagement (CIRCLE) at Tufts University.

For example, voter turnout for adults younger than 30 in Illinois was 43.8 percent for the 2012 presidential election, on par with the national turnout for that age group. Comparatively, youth voter turnout for the 2010 midterm elections was 24 percent in both Illinois and the country. Lv.

On whether the candidates are trying to reach voters his age, Dan Kornas, 32, of Noble Square said, "I don't really think so, at least not for younger voters. I'd like to see a governor bring industry or work into Illinois."

Dick Simpson, a political science professor at UIC and a former alderman, underscored the importance of candidates addressing the issues that most concern young voters. Issues such as pensions and nursing homes, also the subject of numerous campaign attack ads, are not youth issues because the topics don't affect them im-

Corey Algie, 22, is undecided on the governor's race but plans to vote, particularly because the issue of minimum wage is on the ballot.

"It would be a good thing if we saw an increase in minimum wage, especially in the city. Everything is obviously way more expensive than the outlying areas," said Algie, a delivery driver who makes minimum wage and lives in Logan Square. "$8.50 doesn't really cut it for a large amount of young people."

Man monitored for Ebola

Freelance journalist returned from Liberia

Chicago Tribune

Chicago health officials are monitoring a local journalist who recently returned from Liberia, where he covered the Ebola out-

Chicago Department of Public Health officials contacted freelance journalist Marcus DiPaola, 23, of the West Loop, on Wednesday to tell him that nurses will visit him three times a week. They advised that he check his temperature twice a day.

"Mr. DiPaola is not high risk," said Ryan Gage, spokesman for the health department, in an email. "He is low risk. It is not a quarantine, mandatory or otherwise. It's active monitoring."

Although he has shown no symptoms, he is taking his temperature every hour with oral and temple thermometers.

"What I've been telling everybody is I've been taking it so much one of the batteries in my thermometer is dead," said DiPaola, who reported his temperature of 98.8 degrees Thursday morning.

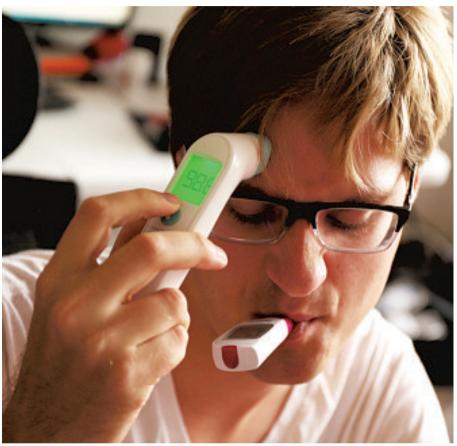

DiPaola, who took photos of burial teams and health care workers for Chinese wire service Xinhua News Agency, said he was never in contact with a person with Ebola.

He said he was screened at New York's John F. Kennedy International Airport on Oct. 19 and took a flight to O'Hare Airport on Oct. 20.

Shortly after, the New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene contacted DiPaola. Once New York officials learned he was a Chicago resident, they told him Chicago Department of Public Health would be in touch with him within 24 hours.

But it wasn't until Wednesday, when DiPaola was interviewed on a local radio station about his work in Liberia, that the Chicago health department contacted him, he said.

"I kind of don't blame them for not monitoring me the second I landed because I'm just so low risk," DiPaola said. "From the time my airplane took off in Casablanca and landed in Monrovia to the time I landed back in JFK, I had no physical contact with any human being at all. No shaking DiPaola has agreed to check in with health department nurses through Nov. 9, he said. In the meantime, he plans to avoid public transit and places where "it would be so crowded that he could involuntarily come in contact with someone."

DiPaola plans to return to West Africa to cover the Ebola outbreak in December and January, he said.

Unused cemetery land to become nature preserve

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

You might be tempted to whisper "I see dead people."

That's because the graves of legendary Cubs announcer Jack Brickhouse, Oscar Mayer, ad exec Leo Burnett, Shedd Aquarium founder John Shedd and two retail giants-Richard Warren Sears and Aaron Montgomery Ward-sit yards away from a planned nature preserve. The 20-acre wooded site neighboring Rosehill Cemetery on the North Side will open to the public next summer.

The list of prominent Chicagoans, along with soldiers, firefighters and political heavyweights such as former Chicago mayors, Illinois governors and one vice president, are buried at the cemetery, which is roughly bordered by Western, Peterson, Ravenswood and Bowmanville avenues.

The land, which the city bought in 2011 for $7.8 million, will be turned into the West Ridge Nature Preserve featuring a nature trail that goes around a 4.5-acre pond and trees, rain garden, fishing stations and wildlife viewing areas.

Burkina Faso military dissolves parliament

Burkina Faso's military dissolved parliament and announced a transitional government on Thursday after violent protests against President Blaise Compaore, but it was not immediately clear who was in charge.

Army chief Gen. Honore Traore said the new government would be installed after consultation with all political parties and would lead the country to an election within 12 months. He also announced a curfew.

The move came after tens of thousands of angry protesters packed the streets of Ouagadougou on Thursday to demand Compaore's departure, storming parliament and setting it on fire and ransacking state television.

At least three protesters were shot dead and scores wounded when security forces opened fire on the crowd.

"Given the need preserve the country from chaos and preserve national unity ... the National Assembly is dissolved, the government is dissolved," Traore told a news conference.

However, he declined to say whether Compaore, whose attempt to extend his 27-year rule has sparked months of tension in the landlocked country, remained the head of state.

Regional West African bloc ECOWAS had said earlier Thursday that it would not accept any party seizing power through non-constitutional means-suggesting diplomatic pressure to leave Compaore in place.

Before the military's move, the president had issued his own statement announcing a state of emergency to be enforced by the army and calling for talks with the opposition.

The protests were sparked by the government's attempt to push a constitutional change through parliament to allow the 63-year-old president to seek reelection next year. Large protests also erupted in Bobo Dioulasso, Burkina's second biggest town, and Ouahigouya, in the north.

SEMAJAY'S SECOND ROUN

Acquitted of murder as a teen, Chicago boxer is fighting his way to the top

By Bill Hillmann | FOR REDEYE

Aug. 9, 2009, was nightmare for Semajay Thomas.

A month earlier, 50-year-old Revnaldo Ortiz of Texas had been beaten to death next door to Thomas' home in West Town.

Acting on a tip, police approached the then-16-year-old that August night at home. They arrested the Rauner College Prep honors student and he later was charged with first-degree murder.

Just three months prior to his arrest, USA Boxing flew Thomas to the AIBA World Junior Boxing Championships in Armenia to represent the U.S. Thomas placed fifth at the event. But all of a sudden his once-promising career was stopped in its tracks.

"It was the worst day of my life," said Nate Jones, Thomas' trainer at the time and a 1996 Olympic bronze medalist. "I just couldn't believe it."

Gang members arrested in the case claimed Thomas took part in the attack. Thomas was held in a juvenile corrections facility for 15 months awaiting trial. It was a time he had hoped to spend traveling the world competing. Yet Thomas never lost faith in the truth.

"I never lost hope because I knew the truth would come to light," said Thomas, now 21. "I have faith in our justice system."

Thomas continued to train while incarcerated. He tore his sheets into long strips and made hand wraps. He also rolled up his mattress, stood it against the wall of his cell and used it as a punching bag. Instead of losing sight of his goal, Thomas trained as best he could and became an inspiration for other inmates.

"I ran around the rec room getting my road work in and when the other kids heard about what happened to me, some of them started running with me, in support of me," Thomas

At the murder trial in November 2010, three of the four eyewitnesses recanted their testimony, and there was no DNA or fingerprint evidence to tie Thomas to the killing.

It felt like the best moment of relief. I had an option the next day to stay home and party with family and friends I didn't see for 15 months or go to the boxing gym. I was in the boxing gym while everyone came to my mom's house to get together. When I walked into the party after training, it was just a great moment. Everyone started yelling and cheering, the media was there. It was just an overwhelming moment."

-Semajay Thomas, on his feelings after being acquitted of murder charges

On Nov. 18, 2010, Thomas was acquitted and set free shortly thereafter. Jesus Duran and William Castillo later were convicted of the murder and sentenced to prison.

"It felt like the best moment of relief," he said. "I had an option the next day to stay home and party with family and friends I didn't see for 15 months or go to the boxing gym. I was in the boxing gym while everyone came to my mom's house to get together.

"When I walked into the party after training, it was just a great moment. Everyone started yelling and cheering, the media was there. It was just an overwhelming moment."

It didn't take long for him to get back to his winning ways. In February 2011, Thomas won the Illinois state tournament, his first men's division title. In July of that year, Thomas won the U.S. championships, became the topranked fighter in the country and earned the top seed in the Olympic Trials leading up to the 2012 London Games.

At the trials, Thomas lost to Pedro Sosa.

"I felt robbed of everything that night because when I was incarcerated they were tellweight bout. Thomas' bout will not be televised.

ing me about Sosa, saying how he's the No. 1 guy in my weight class," Thomas said. "I made my mind up then that I wanted to fight him and get the No. 1 spot. He lost to the guy I beat in the finals of the U.S. championships.

"When we finally got a chance to fight the Olympic Trials, I was the No. 1 guy by then. I came home, I worked so hard to take the No. 1 spot. I respect the judge's decision, but it hurt me deeply."

After the loss, Thomas ate too much and was unable to make weight the next day for his follow-up bout in the double-elimination tournament. He said he regrets how that event played out but has learned from the experience.

"I learned no matter what not to give up because what's taken away from your life can easily be replaced with better," he said.

Afterward, Thomas signed with professional manager Al Haymon, who counts Floyd Mayweather as one of his clients.

"Being with Al Haymon is a blessing," said Thomas, who's pro boxing nickname is "The Truth." "It's a dream come true. Everybody wants to be with Al Haymon. My co-manager is Fletcher Smith is a top NFL manager; I'm his first boxer. We will be looking to fight for a world championship sooner than everyone thinks."

On Saturday, Thomas (4-0, two knockouts) will put his undefeated record on the line at UIC Pavilion against Paul Pindroh (4-0-1, one knockout) of West Virginia.

"I'm so proud to see Semajay accomplishing the things he wanted to accomplish as a child," said Semajay's mother, Carla Thomas. "I always knew he would do it." BILL HILLMANNIS A REDEVE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

How are Chicago sports like Halloween? It's like hoping for king-size Snickers and getting Necco wafers. Chicago sports can frighten almost anyone. Downright scary what I've seen in my lifetime. They both result in throwing up at the end.

What we thought were Bears are just regular people wearing NFL costumes. All of them will trick you into thinking they're treating you. What?

Football vs. rugby. Discuss.

One has 110 million viewers worldwide, the other is the NFL.

I would welcome both groups with open arms. Let's keep it real those boys can fight. Football is tightrope walking. Rugby is tightrope walking without a net. I tried to understand rugby and ... what the ruck?

Rugby breaks your body. Football breaks your heart.

Run-ins with the Bulls

Cleveland, Miami, wherever—this is why LeBron James annoys Chicago

Cleveland may have forgiven LeBron James, but that doesn't mean Chicago must follow suit. As the Bulls prepare to renew their rivalry with the Heat—er, Cavs—on Friday, these five run-ins with the Bulls featuring James should get fans good and lathered up. REDEYE

DEC. 4, 2009

In Cleveland, James does a little dance after drawing a foul. As James shoots his free throws, Noah shouts his disapproval. James approaches Noah, who's sitting on the bench, and the two are still yelling at each other as teammates move to separate them.

APRIL 19, 2010

Joakim Noah launches his famous anti-Cleveland riff following a playoff loss to the Cavs.

"You like it? You think Cleveland's cool? I never heard anybody say I'm going to Cleveland on vacation. What's so good about Cleveland?"

JAN. 4, 2013

Tom Thibodeau (above) wants to beat LeBron as much as anyone, but he's gonna do it on the court, dadgummit. That's the only way to explain the Bulls coach catching and preserving the health of the superstar during this regular-season game.

The severely shorthanded Bulls halt the Miami Heat's 27-game winning streak. Kirk Hinrich proved he would do anything to stop it, including aggressively hugging/tackling James to the floor as he drove to the basket.

LeBron James knocks Nazr

Mohammed (far right) to the floor during a playoff game. Mohammed responds with a two-handed shove to James' chest, earning him an ejection. Mohammed is not pleased.

"When a guy pushes me down, instinctively, I'm going to get up and do something," he said after the game. "Sometimes you have to fight your instincts and do what's right. I'm disappointed I didn't fight my instincts well enough tonight because > I could have probably helped the team a little more."

Oh no, the Bears are the Detroit Lions!

SACKED AGAIN

Bag Boy

We finally did it. We actually became the new Detroit Lions. I didn't think it was possible. For decades, no matter how bad it got, I always took comfort in knowing there was another rung beneath us. Another level of stink, if you will. And that was always occupied by A) the Lions and B) the Chicago/

Arizona Cardinals.

Hey, seriously. Thank you for the blowout against the Pats, guys. Blowouts are great. Blowouts are your friend. Blowouts clarify. Blowouts cut to the heart of the matter. Blowouts reveal that things aren't a fluke. That things are not a mirage.

You're not imagining it. We are paying $20 million-plus to an average quarterback. Shea McClellin was a little rag doll toy for Rob Gronkowski.

We don't utilize our only hope, Matt Forte. And now you know about Marc Trestman. He's quiet, smart, unremarkable. He's like the company's IT guy or whatever. Nice enough. But something about him screams "weenie" so you keep your distance.

Yeah. That guy is our football coach. Basically, we passed on Bruce Arians (6-1) with the Chicago/Arizona Cardinals for Trestman.

I'll let that one sink in because it really hurts. Coaching matters. So, by all means, lets hope the Cubs lock up Joe Maddon. Smart guy, big personality. The Cubs haven't had one of those since ... Don Baylor. No, Dusty Baker. No, Lou Piniella. Maddon was in Chicago once for a White Sox series and, get this, thought, "If you ever won here, you'd never have to buy a drink or a meal ever again."

Sheesh, Joe. I'm sure no one ever thought that way before. Except everyone that's preceded you. He's not even here yet and I'm assuming the worst. I'm guessing it's his glasses. He could run the Bears with those.

So let's give thanks that the Bulls and Blackhawks are playing. Two legitimate title contenders for a hungry city. And look! We have a local! Lemont native Scott Darling in goal and on

As for the Bulls, nice opener! Take that, Carmelo! Now do it again to LeBron on Friday!

And take it easy coming back, D-Rose. The Bulls are stacked. Good thing, a desperate city needs them. BAG BOY IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

marks the start of the 5th annual November of Dressing Nicely (#NODN).

A little background: The project started off as a personal F.U. to a co-worker that said that guys in Chicago couldn't dress for crap. While that suggestion is ludicrous, there's something to be said for it as a lot of people, both locally and nationally, think Chicagoans can't dress nicely. There's a misconception that we're all sweatpants-clad bacon-wrapped goons and I call B.S. on that, quite frankly. You can find plenty of sharply dressed people in this town, whether you're walking down Milwaukee Avenue, State Street or Stony Island. Also, how annoying is it that "stylish" means wearing a three-piece suit or some kind of uncomfortable nightmare ripped from the runway? This month isn't about being a label whore, and it definitely isn't about how much disposable income you have. Personal style means doing you and being confident while you do it. (The only rule I adhere to: Make sure it fits you. Well, that and "Don't wear leather T-shirts.") Open to everyone, #NODN is about showcasing the personal style of Chicago. One of the goals here is to celebrate the unique and fascinating personal style choices of locals while celebrating the diversity of the city.

Want to take part? It's easy Starting Nov 1, post your look to social media using the hashtag #NODN. Do it once or for the whole month—anything goes, as long as you're showcasing your personal style. We'll compile our favorites online at redeyechicago.com/nodn all month long. In addition to that, we'll be spotlighting some stylish Chicagoans, clueing you in on ways to stay on top of your game and having a little fun while doing it. I hope you'll take part. (Also, tell your male co-worker to shave. He looks like a '80s hockey coach who turned to porno to make ends meet.)

ERNEST WILKINS IS CHICAGO'S WINGMAN.

RedEye staffers sound off on their favorite stores for clothing and accessories

I'm never one to be quiet, and style is all about expressing your personality. Even though my mouth is always running, I like to let the threads do the talking.

Mildblend Supply Co.

1342 N. Milwaukee Ave. 773-772-9711

You don't know denim if you haven't shopped this Wicker Park store. It offers an entirely American-made selection of clothing, shoes and grooming products with an emphasis on high-quality construction and design. Oh, and denim. Lots of denim. Look out for free hemming sales.

Haberdash Bespoke & Haberdash EDC

607 N. State St. 312-624-8551: 611 N. State St. 312-646-7870

It's not a store; it's a lifestyle. Haberdash features a collection of menswear and gear that is both modern and classic-great for work and weekending. Bespoke (at 607) is dedicated to tailored menswear-from sport coats to made-to-measure suits-while EDC (at 611) carries more casual sportswear and features a barber shop where you can get a straightrazor shave.

Penelope's

1913 W. Division St. 773-395-2351 Smart designs, perfect colors and beautiful prints fill the racks at this Euro-American style store in Wicker Park. Most of the boutique's stock focuses on prints and colors-perfect for pieces that stand out against more classic threads. Pick up socks, hats or scarves that add a perfect pop of style to any outlit.

at these stores the next stage in a logical evolution of style.

2131 N. Rockwell St. 773-698-7664

Former LDR51354 employees and brains behind popular Chicago street wear brands Vita Morte and Dope Boy Magic have struck out on their own with this new store. Expect new collections from both lines, in addition to pieces from classic brands like Alife and Marithe François Girbaud.

Jugrnaut

427 S. Dearborn St. 3t2-435-4635

A hub for everything from international brands like 10 Deep and Billionaire Boys Club to its own collections, the South Loop company is known for collaborations with everyone from local artists to brands like Old Style.

Saint Alfred

1531 N. Milwaukee Ave. 773-486-7159 Since opening in 2005, the store has brought undenlable amounts of swag to Wicker Park. If you're in the market for the newest limitededition Nike's or limited-edition gear like the recent Treated Crew x Stussy collection, make sure to set your alarm. Lines have been known to start as early as 8 a.m. on Saturdays.

It's true, my cubicle filing cabinet is filled with shoes, not files. Though I love a cheapie pair, good-quality shoes are an investment, and these three shop definitely deliver in that department.

City Soles 2001 W. North Ave. 773-489-2001 Hove this Wicker Park shoe shop for its odd L-shape with two entrances (one off North Avenue and the other off Damen) and its selection of funky footwear for both ladies and gents. Quirky sneakers, chunky heeled boots and bright colored flats abound.

Lori's Shoes

824 W. Armitage Ave. 773-281-5655 Whether you need practical cold-weather boots. professional interview-worthy pumps or strappy heels for your friend's wedding. Lori's has it all. Don't miss the markdowns in the back.

A Pied 2037 W. Roscoe St. 773-281-2210 Walkable wedges, sturdy wellies and more comfortable-but-fashionable footwear options fill this Roscoe Village shoe shop. The Frye boots are pricey, but you will (I promise!) wear them forever and they only get better with age.

I like to keep my outfits simple and neutral, so funky jewelry, cool purses and sunglasses are a must. Here's where I pick up trendy, fun pieces without breaking the bank.

1528 N. Milwaukee Ave. 773-276-7002
This Wicker Park boutique is my go-to for quality vintage accessories and contemporary jewelry with an edge.

Art Effect

934 W. Armitage Ave. 773-929-3600
The jewelry cases in this Lincoln Park boutique's rear room are great for splurges and special occasion pieces, but I love the peg boards near the staircase for more affordable earrings and necklaces.

Vintage Underground

1834 W. North Ave. 773-252-4559

This basement vintage jewelry and accessories shop is a gold mine: a huge selection, a super-knowledgeable owner and prices from steal to splurge.

I'm 6'3", which means jeans are never long enough, normal shorts look like booty shorts on me and the sleeves on my sweaters and jackets fall in that awkward space between my elbows and wrists. I've learned to turn to a few stores that provide special fits for my long limbs. Tall girls unite!

Long Tall Sally

longtallsally.com

Whereas some stores sell "tall" or "long" versions of their normal clothes, Long Tall Sally explicitly sells tall clothes. My earlier complaints of the store were them being a bit too mature for my taste and age, but they're starting to skew younger in their styles and recently launched a sleek new line in collaboration with British apparel line Taller Than Your Average. The only brick-and-mortar store in the U.S. currently is in Minneapolis, so it's online only for me for now.

Some stores claim to offer "tall" sizes, but don't really reach the lengths I need. Gap tall offers "long," which is 34 inches (a very typical "long" length in stores), but it also offers an "X-long," which extends to 36 inches. Beauteous.

Nordstrom Rack

101 E. Chicago Ave. 312-254-3660; 24 N. State St. 312-377-5500

The store offers up to size 14 in women's shoes. I wear a size 11, but I know several women who wear size 12 and can't find widely offered attractive large shoes to save their lives. Nordstrom Rack usually has trendy, comfortable and high-quality shoes at a discounted price for us large-footed ladies. Plus it has frequent "large shoe events," which feature many shoes sizes 10½ to 13.

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

» mpais@ tribune.com» @mattpais A hilarious "Mr. Show" skit featured a TV news program whose slogan was "We Make the News" and whose reporters did things like start fires in the forest so they could then report on said fire.

In the weird, spinetingling "Nightcrawler," freelancer videographer Lou Bloom (Jake Gyl-lenhaal) doesn't exactly go to those lengths for a story, but he's hardly operating on firm professional standards. Lou has no formal education or industry knowledge. When he speaks, it sounds like he's reciting something he read on the Internet. He does understand how much an L.A. local news director (Rene

Nightcrawler

Russo) needs exclusive footage of violent incidents—preferably urban crime in comparatively safe, suburban neighborhoods. She compares her newscast to a woman screaming and running down the street with her throat slit. How's that for motivation?

Lou has no idea what he's doing but does it anyway, awkwardly interrupting a man's 911 call and nearly crashing into a suspect. He calls himself a fast learner, though, and gets ahead in the professional world by crawling into its seams, almost undetected. Socially awkward and prone to blackmail with a smile, Lou is a ruthless insect, creepy but hardly dumb. This only works because of Gyllenhaal's magnetic, chilling performance. If you're ever trying to think of an actor who's carved out an interesting career for himself and doesn't get due credit, here's your answer

The directorial debut for writer Dan Gilroy (Russo's husband and brother of "Michael Clayton" writer/director Tony Gilroy), "Nightcrawler" moves at its own measured, off-putting pace. It's often oddly funny, coaxing humor so the laughs surprise you when they emerge from your own throat. Lou posts an ad for a job, but not what the job is. When Rick (Riz Ahmed) shows up for the interview and tries to sell himself, his best claim is, "I took three buses to get here."

The movie might have felt even more disquieting had it been tighter, and a late, attempted moment of stillness is too unconvincing to be powerful. Yet even though everyone should know TV news is only a filtered version of reality, there's no denying the disturbing truth of "Nightcrawler": that many people assume those in positions of authority or influence got there for trustworthy, legitimate reasons—and that many of them are wrong.

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

Glenna (Kelli Garner) asks Ig (Daniel Radcliffe) if she can have a doughnut. Then she asks if she can eat six doughnuts. Then she admits she wants to get fat because she knows no one will sleep with her unless they're drunk, and everyone already thinks she's trash.

In the horror-comedy "Horns," the outburst comes because Ig's sprouting of horns results in a sort of reverse "Liar Liar": Nearly everyone he encounters blurts out their innermost, least-appropriate-for-public-declaration desires, briefly putting aside the small town's belief that Ig killed his girlfriend, Merrin (Juno Temple). Fortunately, Ig has his parents (James Remar, Kathleen Quinlan), his lawyer/ lifelong pal Lee (Max Minghella) and brother Terry (Joe Anderson) to back him. But director Alexandre Aja's ("Piranha 3D") adaptation of Joe Hill's novel, um, shows how quickly a suspected murderer who increasingly looks like the devil can find himself on his own.

In little pieces, the violent, numbing "Horns" achieves a bent sort of vicious catharsis, such as when an exasperated mom fantasizes about ditching her bratty daughter who declares, "I hate mommy; I want to burn her up in her bed with matches." The same goes for a doctor who's minimally concerned about Ig's condition but confesses a desire for his daughter's friend and does something with his assistant that physicians really aren't supposed to do. Glenna's aforementioned doughnut feast progresses into something resembling an animal in a trough, which gets to humans' baser instincts better than the movie's other explorations of darkness. Once the mystery of Ig's guilt or innocence actually connects about an hour into the movie, red herrings keep your mind busy for a few minutes but far less time than "Gone Girl."

It's all for naught, really, with a shallow examination of love and faith and a typically unimpressive performance from Minghella ("The Social Network"). Radcliffe and Temple do their part, though Merrin's given so little personality that the story has no right suggesting she's such an irresistible catch. Oh, an abundance of biblical imagery also accomplishes about as much as a mass beatdown among TV news reporters, which was a lot more entertaining in "Anchorman." One more thing: Why do David Bowie fans in movies so frequently only know "Heroes"?

HOT RIGHT NOW

Evil Olive 1551 W. Division St. 773-235-9100

The late-night Wicker Park club-home to raucous Monday night Pom & Chicken parties-underwent renovations over the past months, and now is ready to unveil a new LED light wall and two Void sound systems. The bi-level club relaunches with nightly Evil Island-themed parties all weekend, complete with an 18-foot pirate ship, a treasure chest suspended from the ceiling and 10-foot mermaid installations.

Momotaro

820 W. Lake St. 312-733-4818

The Boka Group (Boka, Girl & the Goat, Perennial Virant, GT Fish & Oyster) has expanded its empire with this modern Japanese dazzler in the West Loop. Based on all the different sections of the menu, you'll want to come hungry: There's sunnaku (snacks), summer (apps), soup and salads, rice and noodle dishes, sushi and robata dishes. Read our review online at redeyechlcago.com/momotaro.

Trenchermen

2039 W. North Ave. 773-661-1540

If seeing this Wicker Park restaurant's executive sous chef Rebecca LaMalfa represent Chicago on the latest season of "Top Chef" has you craving a trip back. now's the time. Make reservations for dinner or brunch, or swing in and grab a seat at the bar to chow down on a double burger with aged cheddar and bread and butter pickles.

Trophy Room

170 W. Ontario St. 312-600-6920

The owners of Estate Ultra Bar quietly opened this River North pizza and sports bars in mid-October with two 90-inch TVs and 35 smaller screens tucked between works from local artists on the walls. Snack on 17 different pizzas baked in the wood-fired oven while checking out the menu of 16 draft beers plus 24 macro and craft options in bottles and cans.

Oak & Char

217 W. Huron St. 312-643-2427

What does the "modern Midwestern" cuisine at this new River North restaurant look like? Think cider-brined pork collar with turnips and fermented apples or smoked chicken with kale pesto. A note to boozehounds: No beer, wine or spirits until the liquor license arrives.

Is my boyfriend's new Tinder account totally innocent?

Dear Anna,

My boyfriend set up a Tinder account without telling me a few weeks ago (we are monogamous, or at least I thought we were!). He already exchanged several messages and met up with one girl. though he says nothing happened and that it's a harmless way for him to "blow off steam." I don't know what to do. Hove him, but I feel really betrayed and like I can't trust him now. -Swipe Wrong

Dear SW.

Oh, he wants something to get blown all right, but it ain't steam.

Lots of red flags here, SW. I don't blame you for feeling betrayed. He set up a secret hookup account, used it to meet women, got caught and then, instead of coming clean when he had the chance, told you an even more implausible lie ("I'm just blowing off steam"). Who needs meditation when you can stare at a tiny smartphone screen and methodically rate women's attractiveness? Also the fact that he actually met someone he was talking to on Tinder kind of blows (sorry) his "It's just flirting" cover. Tinder is not an app people join to find folks for your knitting circle—it's for hookups (and, to a lesser extent, dating). That's a lot of lying and covering up to deal with, SW. It's time to take a cold, hard look at the relationship. If you're really inclined to keep the guy, give him one more chance to tell the truth. If he doesn't, however, it's time to take his ass to the dump.

Dear Anna.

I'm fresh out of a six-month relationship and my friends have advised me to go out and have rebound sex. The whole "the fastest way to get over someone is to get under someone" logic. I'm not opposed to this, per se, but the thought of being naked with someone right now is kind of repellent to me. Should I just get it over with and do it anyway? - Back In The Game

Dear BITG.

You're gonna make me do the mom thing, aren't you? Ugh, fine. Let me strap on my Lululemon and pour some herbal tea into a BPA-free travel mug. That's better. Now BITG, if your friends were all jumping off the Hancock building, would you do it too?

You don't need to prove anything to your friends, even if they are well-intentioned. If the thought of having sex with someone right now is "repellent" to you, then by Jove, don't do it. This is not an episode of "Fear Factor"! It's your life. You make the rules (at least when it comes to who gets to see you maked).

Give yourself the time and space to get over your last relationship. I promise someday soon you will want to see the bare, wilting flesh of a fellow human, and that it even will be exciting. But don't force it. As I once learned from a Lululemon bag, "Children are the orgasm of life." Wait, that's not helpful. How about, "Do not use cleaning chemicals on your kitchen counters or floors." You know what? Just take my advice.

Still feeling chronic pain from your injury or surgery?

Anyone can have chronic pain.

Sometimes surgery, an injury, or an accident can result in chronic nerve pain. Nerve pain is often described as a shooting, burning or stabbing sensation. Some of the incidents that can result in this type of nerve pain include:

• Injuries • Surgeries • Accidents • Falls • Burns

Our clinic is conducting a clinical research study to examine the safety and effectiveness of an investigational medication in reducing chronic nerve pain when compared with placebo (inactive substance)

Whoville LITTLE CARPET OF IT WAS A FRIGHT NIGHT AT THE By Dana Moran | REDEYE Since Halloween is on a Friday this year, we're sure most celebs are resting up and putting the final touches on their most excellent costumes. (We're looking at you, Heidi Klum.) But some stars just couldn't resist a mid-week trot on the red carpet for Wednesday's amfAR Inspiration Gala in L.A. The foundation, which benefits AIDS research, honored designer Tom Ford at its event. He showed up in a snazzy tux, as per usual, but some other looks were positively costume-like. Check it out. THE RICHES OF WESTEROS

Who says the coffers at King's Landing are running low? THR.com reports that the cast of "Game of Thrones" has renegotiated its contracts, including an option for Season 7. The "A" tier of cast members— which includes actors Kit Harington (Jon Snow), Peter Dinklage (Tyrion Lannister), Lena Headey (Cersei Lannister), Emilia Clarke (Daenerys Targaryen) and Nikolaj Coster-Waldau (Jaime Lannister)—are paid at the highest level, while the "B" tier—folks like Natalie Dormer (Margaery Tyrell), Sophie Turner (Sansa Stark) and Maisie Williams (Arya Stark)—are paid at a lower level, though both groups were able to score more bucks. How is Arya not A-level? We protest.

Abs descending

You'll soon be seeing Eddie Redmayne as Stephen Hawking in "The Theory of Everything," but before making that movie, he filmed "Jupiter Ascending," which has been pushed back to 2015. And for that sci-fi flick, co-starring Channing Tatum and Mila Kunis, he had to rock some serious abs. Alas, they weren't long for this universe. "It was a fleeting ephemeral moment," Redmayne told E! News on Wednesday at "Theory's" L.A. premiere. "It was there for a second."

THE DIGIT 286

MTV cut down a list of 286 hopefuls to 10 nominees for best worldwide act at the EMAs, thr.com reports. One Direction and 5 Seconds of Summer are among the group, naturally, and the winner will be named during the Nicki Minaj-hosted event Nov. 9 in Glasglow, Scotland.

Back to the playhouse

Though Paul Reubens is 62, he's still not too old for his iconic character, Peewee Herman. Reubens stopped by "The Tonight Show" on Wednesday and told host Jimmy Fallon that a director has been hired for a new feature film starring the playhouse-loving big kid. "We're going to start in February," he said, adding that Judd Apatow is still on board as a producer. Get your bicycles ready.

THE QUOTE

"We're Cuban, we're loud, we're fun."

—Christina Milian, to E! News, on her new reality show, "Christina Milian Turned Up," which goes behind the scenes with the singer and her extended family, including a sister who's launching her own food truck. That's one ambitious family.
